

Cormorant

By Fiona Robbins

Thick air shrouds moon-like sun
Rain-filled sky captures black ocean
Pressing gasps from sea on stone
Hissing spits of summer gone

Diving out of oily dark depths
Wing peeled from petrol water slicks
Drawn to inked horizon lines
Anchored to pier's blackened bones